A NEW LATIN COMPOSITION

Norwood Press J. S. Cushing Co. — Berwick & Smith Cc. Norwood, Mass., U.S.A.

PREFACE.

PART I of the present work is based exclusively on Caesar. The illustrative examples are drawn directly from Caesar's own writings, either unchanged or with unessential alterations designed to adapt the passage for practical use. The sentences of the Exercises bring into use only Caesar's vocabulary — chiefly the common words — and Caesar's constructions. The passages of continued discourse in Part I are devoted partly to a summary of the familiar episodes of the early books of the Gallic War, but deal mainly with the stirring events of the year 54 B.C. as narrated in Book V.

Part II is based on Cicero, and follows in detail the plan of Part I. The passages of continuous discourse interspersed among the Exercises deal with Cicero's life up to his consulship. The remainder give a somewhat detailed account of the career of Verres.

Part III is intended for the last year of the high school or academy, and consists of some thirty passages of continuous discourse, dealing with the subject-matter of the Fourteen Philippic Orations of Cicero.

In compliance with the request of a large number of teachers, I have included material for oral exercises in connection with Parts I and II of this book.

CHARLES E. BENNETT.

11 vir summā auctoritāte, a man of the highest authority. (5)

Remarks.

1 The Ablative of Manner is best regarded as restricted to abstract words such as celeritās, dignitās, lēnitās, prūdentia, etc.

2. The Ablative of Quality primarily designates qualities which are more or less transitory. The observation sometimes made that the genitive denotes internal qualities, and the ablative external ones, is not sufficiently exact. In the phrase hortātur ut bonō animō sint, he urges them to be of good courage, the quality is internal: yet the genitive could not here be used; for while the quality is internal, it is transitory. The theoretical distinction between the Genitive of Quality and the Ablative of Quality is that the genitive denotes permanent, the ablative transitory, qualities. Yet where ambiguity would not result, the ablative may be used to denote a permanent quality. Thus one may say vir summae virtūtis or summā virtūte, a man of the highest character.

In all numerical designations of weight, dimension, etc., the genitive is used.

Among these was Dumnorix, who, (just) as he was most popular² with ³ the common people of the Gauls, so was a most bitter ⁴ enemy of the Romans. A little while before, he had said to the Haedui that Caesar had decided to make him ⁵ king. Intrigues of Dumnorix (continued).

Dumnorix was unwilling to go with Caesar, because he saw that he would never again find so good an opportunity of conspiring against the Roman people. Accordingly he begged that he might be permitted ' to remain at home; (saying) that he was inexperienced in sailing and feared the sea; that besides there were religious observances² which he could not perform, unless he should remain in Gaul. tending with each other for the supremacy.³ The latter at once came to Caesar and informed him what was being done by Indutiomarus. He⁴ meanwhile had gathered troops and was preparing to fight. Many (of the) senators, however, induced⁵ by the authority of Cingetorix, because they knew how powerful the Roman legions were,⁶ came to Caesar's camp and put themselves under his protection.⁷ Then Indutiomarus, since he saw that no one lent him help, attempted to excuse himself.

Caesar, since he thought he ought to set out¹ at once, demanded nothing except hostages from Indutiomarus. At the same time he did all things which he could for increasing the prestige² of Cingetorix. The next winter, after Caesar had returned from Britain, Indutiomarus, who resented (the fact) that³ his power among his (countrymen) had been impaired, began to seek an opportunity of avenging the injury. This was easier because the Roman camps which had been established among the Belgians were far distant from each other, so that one⁴ could not lend help to another.

Ten days after¹ the legions had fortified their camp at Aduatuea among the Eburones, Indutiomarus persuaded Ambiorix² and Catuvoleus,² each of whom held one half³ of the lands of the Eburones, to attack the Roman camp. Caesar was more than two hundred miles away. In the camp, in charge of which were Sabinus and Cotta, there were scarcely six thousand soldiers, of whom the larger part had just⁴ been enrolled. The Gauls thought therefore that an excellent opportunity ⁶ of securing possession of the camp⁶ had been offered them.

But the camp was strongly¹ fortified and had been placed on high ground.² Our men quickly took arms and mounted³ the rampart.⁴ Meanwhile (some) Spanish horsemen, having made a sally,⁵ drove back the Gauls with great slaughter. Three years before, Caesar had relieved Ambiorix from the tribute which he had been forced to pay to the Aduatuci, and had also restored to him his son and his brother's son, whom the Aduatuci held as hostages. In the beginning of his speech Ambiorix mentioned these favors and declared that he desired to make a return¹ for² them. He said that he had not³ attacked the camp of his own accord, but forced by his tribesmen. These he said would not have brought war on the Romans, unless they had been compelled by the common conspiracy of all the Gauls.

Ambiorix addcd¹: That his very weakness² proved³ that he was speaking the truth,⁴ for he was not so foolish⁵ as to think that his forces could resist the Romans; that the states of Gaul had leagued themselves together⁶ for the recovery of their freedom;⁷ that on that very day all the Roman camps would be attacked at one and the same time; let Sabinus therefore be on his guard;⁸ a very large multitude of Germans also had crossed the Rhine and would attack him within a few days.

If the two generals would follow his advice, they would abandon their camp at once and hasten to the winter quarters of Cicero or Labienus He promised that no one would attempt to attack them on the march

After he had delivered this speech,¹ Ambiorix withdrew, and the two knights returned to the camp and reported to Sabinus and Cotta what they had heard. These thought that the words of Ambiorix ought not to be despised; and that one tribe would not have dared to make war on the Roman people,² unless it were relying upon the help of the others.³

Suggestions on the Exercise.

1. after he had delivered this speech : translate : this speech having been delivered.

2. on the Roman people: use the dat.

3. the others: i.e. the other tribes.

27.

A Council of War is Held.

Accordingly the tribunes and centurions of the first rank¹ were summoned to a council (of war), which was held² in the middle of the camp. Cotta spoke first, (saying) that without the order³ of Caesar they ought not to leave the camp; that (protected) by their fortifications they could resist all enemies who could be led against them; that they had already repulsed those who had attacked the camp; that a large supply⁴ of grain was on hand and that more was expected daily;⁵ finally that Exercises in Continued Discourse.

Eburones, hearing the voices⁵ from the camp, perceived that the Romans had decided to follow their advice, and prepared to attack them from an ambush, as they marched⁶ (along). That night they hid⁷ themselves in the woods⁸ through which the road led,⁹ and there awaited the approach of the Romans.

On the following day he came into the territory of the Nervii, who had not forgotten the battle in which, three years before, Caesar had reduced their tribe nearly to extinction.² Ambiorix told their chiefs that Cicero's camp was near by;³ why should they not do⁴ as he had done,⁵ attack ⁴ the legion, and recover ⁴ their freedom ?

Kindled¹ by these words of Ambiorix, the Nervii and other neighboring tribes joined² themselves with the Eburones, and the whole multitude set out for the Roman camp. Our men, as soon as they saw the Gauls approaching, quickly rushed³ to arms and mounted the rampart⁴ to ward off the enemy Cicero immediately sent messengers to inform Caesar of the danger, and promised them large rewards, if they should deliver⁵ the letters. The letter which Cicero gave him was concealed² in a spear. Carrying this the Gaul easily made his way¹ to Caesar, and informed him of the dangers of Cicero and the legion. That night Caesar was informed of their departure through a letter of Cicero, and encouraged his men for the conflict.² On the following day, having advanced about four miles, he came to a small stream, on the opposite side of ³ which the enemy were waiting. Thus it happened that the Gauls boldly advanced up hill² against the camp, thinking that they would easily defeat the Romans.
